

Generating effective Marketing Content – What does it take?

While managing your customer relationships at different levels right from a suspect stage till the contract closure stage, you will need different forms of 'effective marketing content'. What is this 'Effective' marketing content' then? And how do you go about generating it?

For your business to be successful, you need to manage the relationships that you have with your prospects, customers and stakeholders. While managing these relationships at different levels right from a suspect stage till the contract closure stage, you will need different forms of 'effective' marketing content. What is this 'Effective' marketing content then?

Make your content

- Compelling & Engaging
- Relevant & Fulfilling
- Convenient & user friendly

Content takes the shape of different marketing artifacts (e.g. Flyers, Brochures, Articles, White papers, Blogs, Website content, email newsletters, Press releases, Case studies, Customer testimonials) at different points in time. For it to be effective, it should meet the objectives and the purpose at different levels in the buying cycle.

Here are some characteristics of great & effective marketing content

1) Compelling & Engaging

With the initial few paras/words/subject headers/abstract, it should feel compelling to go through the details included. It should engage the attention of the reader and arouse enough curiosity.

2) Relevant & Fulfilling

Having generated the curiosity, the promised value should be delivered (fulfilled) by the content. This avoids the negative effect of disappointing the reader and also increases the chance of the content being further distributed / recommended amongst peer communities.

3) Convenient and user friendly

Content should be simple, convenient and in an appropriate format. Content should be designed, specifically for print or for electronic views.

How do you go about generating such kind of content then?

Generating effective content takes planning, focus and a lot of effort. Here are some things to get you started

1) Research

- a. Research your target audience, who is expected to consume the content
- b. Understand the objectives, that you need to achieve with the content
- c. Research your competitors to understand what they are talking about
- d. Research your target industry to look for any signs of any trends/implications developing and how these are going to be affecting your target audience.

2) Generate content repositories and filter

- a. Gather all reference content that you feel can be re-used in some way to meet the above objectives.
- b. Do Intelligent Tagging and maintain your content repository well, so that you can get to the content that you want, when you need to.

3) Write, Refine, Package & Publish

- a. Define your content headers and based on the same, start populating content. Focus on your objectives
- b. Refine content in line with the objectives
- c. Package, as appropriate for the format in which it is going to be used. Use Design effectively
- d. Publish content & Promote

Happy Content editing !
